

Prophecy Seen In Hopi Writing

Old Indian Prayer Stone
Tells of Big War, Then
New Social Order.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.—It is written "that the time shall come when all white men divide against each other and great trouble will come involving many nations." "All people will fight, but the fight will put all the people of the world in the same position."

In these words, said by two Hopi chiefs, to be inscribed on an ancient Indian sacred stone, are the predictions of the current war in Europe, entrance of the United States into the conflict and the coming of a new social order in which all men will be equal.

The predictions were inscribed on the rock "generations and generations ago" by Chief Katchongva, keeper of the holy stone, who appeared together in federal court in defense of six Hopi youths convicted of refusing to register for selective service.

"We, the Hopi, are warned to stay out of that fight," said Katchongva. "It is written that we are to show our bows and arrows to no one at that time."

Old Tribal Mythology.

This explanation, hidden in the ancient mythology of the tribe, was presented by Chief Katchongva and Chief Pongonyama, keeper of the holy stone, who appeared together in federal court in defense of six Hopi youths convicted of refusing to register for selective service.

The two chiefs, dressed in the colorful beads, purple ribbons, hampered silver ornaments and purple shirts of the tribe, said the holy stone did not tell of war, among the warring white factions, would emerge the victor.

The chiefs told the court the following legend, which they said was read in the small stone, scarcely larger than a saucer:

"There will come a time in this world when there will be great trouble involving many nations. Then the Hopi are warned to show their bows and arrows to no one at that time."

"One day a white brother will come who will be able to read the things on this sacred stone. When he comes, we will know him and he will enable the Hopi and all the other people of the world to share equally in the wealth that is given to us who are Hopi."

"Prior to that time," the chiefs related, "all people will fight. We Hopi are warned to stay out of that fight."

Prophecy of Equality.

"The fight, though, will put all the people of the world in the same position," Katchongva said the prayer-rock inscription said.

"We are sure that the time has not come when the white brother will help us because we have shown the stone to the government and it has not been able to find any man who can read it."

Katchongva looked at the rock a moment longer and then added:

"It was predicted, for instance, that when the main chief fell away from the old tradition, new rulers would arise. We two have come to rule after the main chief, as prophesied, failed to live up to everything in our religion."

"For the tribe to go forward, it must stick to the religion. We Hopi want to stand where we are, which is simply that we want no part in the white man's quarrel."

"We do not want to advise any youth not to register for selective service. Nor do we advise any to register. We hold ourselves aloof from such advice, because we feel that in the light of our prophecy we should not mix in it."

Diploma Earned in 1885

OGDEN, UTAH.—Mrs. Lilliebell McChesney Falck, 74-year-old Ogden housewife, now possesses a degree of bachelor of arts awarded by an Iowa college she attended, conferred by a college in South Dakota she had never seen, and presented at a college in Utah.

The odd series of events that led to the presentation of the degree at Weber Junior college here began 56 years ago when she was graduated from Burlington college in Burlington, Iowa.

The year Mrs. Falck was graduated, Burlington college closed and her class—the class of '85—was "lost." No diplomas were awarded. More than half a century later records of the class were discovered at Sioux Falls college in South Dakota, the successor to Burlington college.

Mrs. Falck's credits were re-established and the degree awarded at Weber Junior college in Utah.

Woman's Bid Is Lowest

For Rural Mail Route

COWLESVILLE, N. Y.—The mail routes between here and Alden have a feminine touch now.

Miss Louis H. Tingle is one of the few women ever to carry mail in western New York. She has been appointed for four years on having submitted the lowest bid for the post.

Miss Tingle succeeds Herbert Martin, who has carried the mail for the past four years.

Fledgling

Flying cadet James H. Doolittle Jr., son of the famous army speed flier, Maj. James H. Doolittle, is shown (right) with Lieut. Kline D. Cuberton, flight instructor. The young flier is ready for his basic training as an air corps pilot at Randolph field, Texas, called the "West Point of the Air."

Didn't Get Away

Lord Halifax, British ambassador, took time out for a day's shopping while on tour of the U. S. He caught a 22-pound yellowtail, and this barracuda.

Minute Make-Ups

A CRISP white veil does wonders to brighten a dark hat—and to date your summer complexion. You've gone in for the pretty-pretty color effect in makeup, that wisp of white veiling adds a fresh touch. Or if your skin is ivory tan, the sheer white strikes a smart contrast.

Intelligence Tests

We exhibit here a sketch of a sea serpent which was drawn from a description given by the sailor who claims to have seen the animal. After the picture was drawn, however, the artist realized that the description was probably wholly imaginary, for it includes a serious contradiction, and that the man who claimed to have seen the beast was unreliable.

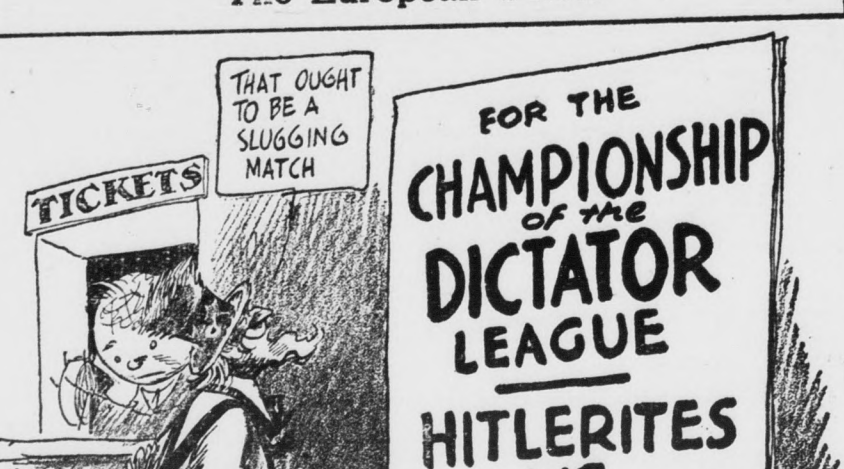

Here is the description. Allow four minutes to examine it and tell why it is contradictory.

"We were sailing south from Vancouver, and late in the afternoon of the second day out, during my watch, I sighted a strange animal, like a snake, having a somewhat enlarged head with two horns, and as it swam its head, neck and two curves of its body showed. The body was the same thickness all the way along, and as nearly as I could gauge I saw about half of its length. As the animal swam along it made hardly a ripple.

"The whole length of the monster was a hundred feet."

Engineers Dig Lengthy

Ditch Using Explosives

READING, PA.—Ditch-digging on a grand and unusual scale was demonstrated near here by agricultural extension engineers from Pennsylvania State college.

For the instruction of neighboring farmers, the engineers dug a ditch 285 feet long, 1 foot wide and 3 1/2 feet deep, by exploding a series of nitroglycerin dynamite sticks.

The new method is cheaper, just as efficient and infinitely quicker. It is most suited to damp meadows lands that require draining, ditches for culverts or any other purpose.

Come Back for the Poles,

Pastor Tells Tent Thieves

WASHINGTON.—The Rev. Ernest E. Grose, evangelist, appealed to the newspapers for help in finding his gospel tent—lost, strayed or stolen.

"It is 60 feet long, 40 feet wide, and it is made of canvas. It has a lot of things in it, and it is very valuable. If anyone has it, please bring it back, please and get the tent poles, as these are useless to the church," said a statement issued by the Rev. M. Grose.
